CLEARING SALE

There are many good reasons for special sales. A merchant may have too many goods, or more than he requires of one kind, or he may have numerous small lots in which the assortment of sizes is broken, and therefore be willing to sacrifice profit in order to clean up. We shall now commence a special clearing sale—it will be bona fide.

We Will Save Our Patrons Money

It will not be a sale of "job stuff" or marked-up and then marked down again stock. Our regular high class suits, overcoats, etc., for men, boys and children, will go at cut prices. Nothing sensational about this sale. It's simply a money-saving proposition.

ON WEST AFRICAN COAST.

Napanee, Jan. 3, 1907.

Editor Beaver:

Dear Sir,—I have received a letter from Mr. A. T. Hagerman, who is on the West African coast, and as he has been a resident of Napanee for many years, and has many friends here, I thought a few extracts from his letter would be interesting to them.

Mr. Hagerman is in the employ of the Canadian Gold Fields, Limited, and is now at Axim, Gold Coast Colony, West Africa. He says:

"I left Montreal on the 19th of October, and arrived at Axim on the 6th of November. The voyage was a very pleasant one, and I enjoyed it very much. We had a fine passage down the St. Lawrence, and the weather was very fine all the way down to the Bay of Biscay. We had a very rough passage across the Bay of Biscay, and I was sick for a couple of days. After that I was all right. We had a very pleasant passage down the coast of Portugal, and I enjoyed it very much. We had a very rough passage across the Bay of Biscay, and I was sick for a couple of days. After that I was all right. We had a very pleasant passage down the coast of Portugal, and I enjoyed it very much.

"We arrived at Axim on the 6th of November, and I was very glad to get ashore. The town is very small, and there is not much to see. The people are very friendly, and I have made many friends. The climate is very hot, and I have had to change my clothes several times a day. I have also had to take quinine every day to prevent fever. I have not had any fever yet, and I hope I will not have any. The food is very good, and I have had no trouble with it. I have had to eat a lot of fruit, as there is not much else to eat. The fruit is very cheap, and I have had a lot of it. I have also had to drink a lot of water, as it is very hot. I have had to drink a lot of water, as it is very hot. Early next morning, when, with gun over my shoulder, I went off alone to hunt, every bare bush, every deserted farm, every crumbling fence, kept calling "Let go! Let go!" JANUARY 5, 7, 8, 9, 1907.

Some Philosophy about economizing: When is economy not a virtue? When is some one else who is practicing it. That may be sophistry (specious) or it may be philosophy, anyhow, its human nature, which is usually a mixture of both. But when you yourself wish to economize, we are prepared to help you do it. Come and see the bargains advertised on this page and judge for yourself as to the lines left from the season that must be cleared before the 9th of this month. Everything will have a price ticket on to save time. Our increased staff of salespeople have been busy all week getting our merchandise ready for this "clean-sweep sale." In fact you will find everything arranged for your convenience at this store. "The money cheerfully refunded." "gag" being a thing of the past. We take great pains having sales properly conducted.

CHAPTER XVI.

"But, Jove, I like that fellow's coolness," said Lorry to Harry Anguish after the interview had ended. "He was a thorn in my flesh, but I admire him for his courage. Begad, I wish I might have had it with me on that day."

"I, too, admire that darned wild man," said Anguish. "He knows how to make love to me. How in the world did you get that into your head?"

On a day soon after the return of Lorry and Anguish from a trip to the frontier Beverly expressed a desire to visit the monastery of St. Valentine, high on the mountain top. It was a long ride over the circuitous route by which the steep incline was avoided, and it was necessary for the party to make an early start.

Harry Anguish and his wife the countess, while Beverly's companion was the gallant Colonel Quimper. Baldos, relegated to the background, brought up the rear with Haddan.

For a week or more Beverly had been behaving toward Baldos in the most cavalier fashion. Her friends had been teasing her, and, to her own intense amazement, she resent it. The fact that she felt the sting of their sly taunts was sufficient to arouse in her the distressing conviction that he had become important enough to prove embarrassing. While confessing to herself that it was not treacherous and weak she proceeded to ignore Baldos with astonishing persistency. Apart from the teasing it seemed to her of late that he was showing a shade too confident.

He occasionally met this deferential air and reared into a very pleasant but highly reprehensible style of friendliness. A touch of the countryside crept out here and there, a tinge of the oil from his hair, a certain perfume as a soldier. His touch was freer, his eyes less under subjugation, his entire personality more self-assertive. Apparently it made not the difference to him whether he was in or out of favor. Beverly was at high endgrees and

THE ROBINSON CO. LIMITED — Napanee's Greatest Store — THE ROBINSON CO. LIMITED

Our Big January Sale.

It's a good sale that will make a favorable record in such weather as we have had—but this is a good sale—and therefore we have created another record week.

This big store, with its great stocks, must be maintained at the high standards—these big stocks get "frazzled" at the edges from inroads made by heavy selling and therefore periodic clearances and readjustments are unavoidable, imperative. And as our regular prices are calculated to give the best possible values, OUR REDUCED PRICES HAVE EXTRA SIGNIFICANCE.

THE ROBINSON CO'S

Winter Clothing Clearance

Nearly 150 Men's, Boy's and Children's Overcoats, and Over 700 Suits.

This great stock of Suits and Overcoats, all new this season, comprises a very great assortment of carefully made clothing. All are reduced now—"reduced beyond rhyme or reason," says our clothing buyer, "for look at wool prices." But they are reduced not to suit him, but to drive ahead this growing business by maintaining our policy, "all new season's goods must be sold during that season's." There is no reserve whatever. Every Suit, Overcoat, Ulster, Winter Pants and Pea Jacket are included in this reduction sale. It's just a simple, straight, sweeping mark down.

The pricing is done on our standard. For instance, when we say $5 for a $10 suit or Overcoat, remember that most stores would have priced the garment $12.00. The savings therefore are all they seem to be, and more.

of that all the newspapers are silent about Christ's childhood days. And yet, my friends, in all a man's life I do not believe there is a time when it has such realm or sphere a person has more influence for good than does the godly child within the four walls of a home.

Oh, the patience and the gentleness of a holy spirit filled little child! There is nothing like unto it this side of heaven, Christ said. If you want to enter the greatest of the kingdom of heaven, then you must become like one of these little children. And most of us know that there is no one who will endure with more things than one of our children. Some time ago it was my privilege to call upon the family whose little boy, Frankie, was about ten years of age. There I found a little fellow, bound up in rags, and suffering intensely. Yet as soon as I entered the room he greeted me with a smile. Then he began to tell me about the other children. He seems to live so close to God that at times I am afraid he will not remain with us very long. I must not be selfish, and long for Him to remain with us. Yet we must not forget that the Lord loves little

Every Nurse will tell you "Invalids require nourishment that's easily digested, for in cases of sickness the gastric juices are so weakened they cannot act properly on ordinary foods."

Some stimulation is also required, but it must be stimulation without reaction. Tea, coffee, spirituous drinks and similar preparations are stimulants that react.

Beef tea and meat extracts are also stimulants, but with this difference, they don't react. Yet while they have stimulating properties, they are practically devoid of nourishment.

"Bovril" not only stimulates but nourishes as well, for in it the nourishing qualities of beef, fibrine and albumen are fully preserved.

Furs.

Still greater reductions on Furs to clear them. They have got to go. The old store notion was to insist on a profit with every single thing, and never to sell except at a profit. The result was plenty of old stale goods that nobody wanted. We believe in keeping things moving, and our idea of a good store is something more than a storage warehouse. It will pay you to buy Furs now for next winter. Bargains such as we are offering are few and far between. Of course the sizes are broken in some lines, but it is well to remember that good furs are costing more each year, and that the reductions are genuine. No goods changed during this sale.

Call and get our prices.

Whitewear.

We take pleasure in announcing to the public that our great annual Whitewear Sale will take place WEDNESDAY, JAN. 16th, when we will place on sale the largest consignment of Whitewear that ever came to Napanee. The women whose love of refinement and daintiness is instinctive and irresistable, brides soon-to-be and in fact almost everyone of the feminine persuasion will be keenly interested in this fact.

We have a very large assortment of Whitewear Sets in the sale this January, three or four beautifully finished pieces to a set. The styles are exclusive, each garment of a set being matched in material, trimming, etc. The idea is the very epitome of daintiness in lingerie, and we know you'll be delighted with the idea, exquisitiness in this important matter. Beverly of Graustark

By Geo. Barr McCutcheon.

Author of "Graustark."

Copyright, 1904, by Dodd, Mead & Co.

Something was stinging her eyes fiercely, and she closed them to keep back the tears of mortification.

"Miss Calhoun," he said, in a manner changing swiftly, "I have felt from the first that you are not the Princess of Graustark. I knew it an hour after I received Edelweiss. Prana gave me a note at Ganlook, but I did not read it until I was a member of the guard."

"You have known it so long?" she cried joyously. "And you have trusted me? You have not hated me for deceiving you?"

"I have never ceased to regard you as my sovereign," he said softly.

"But just a moment ago you spoke of me as a frisky American girl," she said resentfully.

"I have used that term but once, while I have said 'your highness' a thousand times. Knowing that you were Miss Calhoun, I could not have meant either."

"I fancy I have no right to criticise you," she humbly admitted. "After all, it does not surprise me that you were not deceived. Only an imbecile could have been fooled all these weeks. Every one said that you were no fool. It seems ridiculous that it should have gone to this length, doesn't it?"

"Not at all, your highness. I am not a fool."

"You have the habit, I see," she smiled.

"I have several months yet to serve as a member of the guard. Besides, I am under orders to regard you as the princess. General Marlanx has given me severe instructions in that respect."

"You are willing to play the game to the end?" she demanded, more gratified than she cared to have been.

"Assuredly, yes. It is the only safeguard I have. To alter my belief publicly would expose me to—to—"

"To what, Baldos?"

"To ridicule, for one thing, and to the good-natured mirth of Count Abenheim. Besides, it would deprive me of the privilege I mentioned a moment ago, the right to kiss your hand, to be your slave and to do homage to the only sovereign I can recognize. Surely, you will not subject me to exile from the only joys that life holds for me. You have sought to deceive me, and I have tried to deceive you. Each has found the other out, so we are quits. May we not now combine forces in the worthy effort to deceive the world? If the world doesn't know that it knows, why, the comedy may be long drawn out and its climax be made the more amusing."

"I'm afraid there was a touch of your old time sarcasm in that remark," she said. "Yes, I am willing to continue the comedy. It seems the safest way to protect you—especially from Count Morlaix. No one must ever know, Baldos; it would be absolutely fatal. I am glad, oh, so glad, that you have known all the time! It has lifted my mind and my conscience immeasurably."

"Yes," he said quietly. "I have known all along that you were not Mr. Lorry's wife." He had divined her thought and she flushed hotly. "You are still a princess, however. A poor but honest commoner is not the husband for a princess. Please don't look upon the rich American girl's sovereign whom he has to ransom from far below."

"Oh, I'm not so rich as all that!" she cried. "Besides, I think it is time for a general clearing up of mysteries. Are you Prince Ivantzu, Prince Frederic or that other one—Christobal something? Come, be fair with me."

"It seems that all Edelweiss looks upon me as a prince in disguise. You found me in the hills—"

"No, you found me. I have not forgotten, sir."

"I was a vagabond and, a fugitive. My friends are hunted as I am. We have no home. Why every one should suspect me of being a prince I cannot understand. Every roamer in the hills is not a prince. There is a price upon my head, and there is a reward for the capture of every man who flees with me in the pass. My name is Paul Baldos, Miss Calhoun. There is no mystery to that. If you were to mention it in a certain city, you would quickly find that the name of Baldos is not unknown to the people who are searching for him. Be your highness. I repeat accordingly that I must destroy the slightest impression that I am of royal blood. Perhaps I am stealing a pretty romance, but it cannot be helped. I was Baldos the great hunter. I am now Baldos the guard. Do you think that I would be serving as a Graustark guard if I were any one of the men you mention?"

Beverly listened in wonder and some disappointment, it must be confessed. Somehow a spark of hope was being forever extinguished by this straightforward denial. He was not to be the prince she had seen in dreams. "You are not like any one else," she said. "That is why we thought of you as—as—"

"As one of those unhappy creatures they call princes? Thank fortune, your highness, I am not yet reduced to such straits. My exile will come only when you send me away."

They were silent for a long time. Neither was thinking of the hour or the fact that her absence in the castle could not be unnoticed. Night had fallen heavily upon the earth. The two faithful chair bearers, respectful but with wonder in their souls, stood afar off and waited. Baldos and Beverly were alone in their own little world.

"I think I liked you better when you wore the red feather and that horrid patch of hair," she said musingly.

"And was a free hearted vagabond," he added something imploring in his voice.

"An independent courtier, if you please, sir," she said severely.

"The price you want me to go back to the hills? I have the patch and the feather, and my friends are—"

"No! Don't suggest such a thing—yet!" She began the protest eagerly and ended it in confusion.

"Alas, you see in that some day banishment is not unthinkable."

"You don't expect to be a guard all your life, do you?"

"Not to serve the Princess of Graustark, I confess. My aim is much higher. If God lets me choose the crown I would serve I would enlist for life. The crown I would serve is wrought of love, the throne I would kneel before is a heart, the sceptre I would follow is in the slender hand of a woman. I could live and die in the service of my own choosing, but I am only the humble poet hunter whose hopes are phantoms, whose ideals are centered in impotence."

"That was beautiful," murmured Beverly, looking up, fascinated for the moment.

"Oh, that I had the courage to enlist," he cried, bending low once more. She felt the danger in his voice half tremble, less with something more than loyalty, and drew her hand away from a place of instant jeopardy. It was fire that she was playing with, she realized with a start of consciousness. Sweet as the spell had grown to be she saw that it must be shattered.

"It is getting frightfully late," she abruptly exclaimed. "They'll wonder where I've gone to. Why, it's actually dark!"

"It has been dark for half an hour, your highness," said he, standing erect and off up with sudden rigidness that distressed her. "Are you going to return to the castle?" a

"Yes. They'll have out a searching party pretty soon if I don't appear."

"You have been good to me today," he said thoughtfully, "I shall try to merit the kindness. Let me—"

"Oh, please don't talk in that humble way! It's ridiculous. I'd rather have you absolutely impertinent, I declare upon my honor I would. Don't you remember how you talked when you were the red feather? Well, I liked it!"

Baldos laughed easily, happily. His heart was not very humble, though his voice and manner were.

"Red is the color of insolence, you mean."

"It's a good deal jauntier than blue," she declared.

"Before you call the bearers, Miss your highness, I wish to say something I said awhile ago," he said very earnestly.

"I should think you would," she responded, utterly misinterpreting his infant.

"You asked me to tell you what my message to Ravenne contained and I refused. Subsequently the extent of his message to me led us into a most thorough understanding. It is only just and right that you should know what I said to him."

"I trust you, Baldos," she protested gayly.

"That is why I tell this to you. Yesterday, your highness, the castle guard received their month's pay. You may not know how well we are paid, so I will say that it is 10 gavvos to each. The exchange which I gave to Ravenne contained my wages for the past six weeks. They need it far more than I do. There was also a short note of good cheer to those poor comrades of mine and the assurance that one day our luck may change and starvation be succeeded by plenty. And, still more, I told him that I knew you to be Miss Calhoun and that you were my angel of inspiration. That was all, your highness."

"I thank you, Baldos, for telling me," she said softly. "You have made me ashamed of myself."

"In the contrary, I fear that I have been indulging in many heroics and romance, like a salad, require a certain quantity of oil."

"Since you are Baldos and not a fiery prince I think you may instruct the guard to carry me back, being without the noisome tapestry. Could I transplant me in a white? Goodness, what a thought!"

Within ten feet of the sedan chair and directly behind the tall guard stood a small group of people. He and Beverly, engrossed in each other, had not heard their approach. How long they had been silent spectators of the little scene only the intruders knew. The startled, shashed eyes of the girl in the chair were not long in distinguishing the newcomers. A pace in front of the others stood the gaunt, shadowy form of Count Marlanx.

Behind him were the Princess Yetive, the old prime minister and Baron Dalgleus.

Thin, Bloodless People

Are constantly in danger of contracting disease of one kind or another. Good rich, red blood naturally repels disease and destroys disease germs, and the thin, poor blood is in this condition is practically proof against germ diseases.

On the other hand, if the blood is weak, thin and watery, the system is in no condition to resist attack, and the pranmic person is always liable to contract Consumption, La Grippe, Typhoid, Pneumonia, and kindred diseases; Coughs and colds are easily taken and hard to shake off and disease of some kind is always either present or impending.

The moral is, find something to enrich the blood." There is just one preparation which can lay claim to this distinction, and that is

FERROL

FERROL is a scientific combination of organic iron and organic phosphorus, the two elements which are absolutely necessary to enrich the blood, and in such a way that they will be taken up by the blood and carried to every part of the body. Within a few days after you commence to take FERROL you will notice a decided change for the better, and in one day. Delays are dangerous.

THE SCENT OF SICKNESS.

Most Diseases, It Is Claimed, Have Their Characteristic Odors.

The acuteness of the sense of smell is far greater in many of the lower animals—dogs, for example—than in man, and they employ it in guiding them to their food, in warning them of approaching danger and for other purposes. The sphere of the susceptibility to various odors is more uniform and extended in man, and the sense of smell is capable of great cultivation. Like the other special senses, it may be cultivated by attention and practice. Experts can discriminate qualities of wines, liquors, drugs, etc. Diseases have their characteristic odors.

Persons who have visited many different asylums for the insane recognize the same familiar odor of the insane. It is not insane asylums alone, but prisons, jails, workhouses, armies in camp, churches, schools and nearly every household that have characteristic odors. It is when the insane, the prisoners and the soldiers are massed together in large groups—for lodgings, that their characteristic odor is recognized. Most diseases have their characteristic odors, and by the experienced nurse, medical, in hysteria, the odors of pineapple. Measles, diphtheria, typhoid fever, scarlet fever, smallpox, etc., have characteristic odors.—Philadelphia Record.

STOMACH'S IMPORTANCE.

How to Strengthen It so That It Will Act as It Should.

The stomach is the principal organ concerned in the digestion of food. It is a muscular bag or sac of from 2 to 3 gallons capacity, which by the contraction of its muscular walls properly digests the food it receives. When the stomach is overworked and forming poisonous acids and gases that are absorbed into the blood, poisoning the system and producing the headache.

To cure good health, it is absolutely necessary that the stomach and other organs should be strong, and this can be done by using Mi-o-na Stomach Tablets. They act directly on the stomach, digesting the food so that it will not ferment and sour, but will be changed into a form that will be easily assimilated by the blood. Mi-o-na Stomach Tablets are sold by druggists everywhere, and a large box will be sent on receipt of 50 cents by Mi-o-na Co., Buffalo, N.Y. Sold by Dr. Chamberlain's Medicine Store.

A TROPICAL TERROR.

Most Dreaded of Living Things in Equatorial Africa.

Europeans who visit the great equatorial forests of Africa are subject to many risks, but none perhaps so dreaded as contact with the huge, hairy, or great bull ant, which is said to be the most dreaded of living things to be found in that region. It is deadliness in the extreme. That which it attacks it vanquishes on the spot, nothing carries away to be further considered. Elephants, leopards, gazelles, lions, snakes, reptiles, monkeys, even the human species all of the denizens succumb. By them any resistance of which they know it to be capable. According to the accounts of experienced observers, including Bull and Livingstone, the bull ant is not armed, nature being in this respect more kind and wise in its gifts. One of these observers has been known to take twelve bones to pieces in one night. They only prefer the shade and, rather than be exposed to the rays of the blazing sun, will burrow tunnels and the surface of the ground and thus travel until they come to the shelter of trees. Any animal which, unaware of the proximity of the bull ant, and regardless of the solitude of the veldt, happens to be attacked has no chance of escape. It is devoured with unbelievable haste, and within a few minutes a pile of bleached bones marks the spot where it reposed. A great deal of valuable information about this dreaded creature has been published by a French naturalist, M. de Chaillu, who has described a personal encounter with the bull ants. "I remember well the last time I met with bushknaves on a road I know not what was in store for me. I was hunting by myself, when suddenly the forest became alive with the foe. A soldiers dread hound me, and I stood still in the heating path, reading on my gun. Suddenly, as if by magic, I was covered and bitten everywhere. I fled in haste and found refuge in a deep stream, yet even then the strong pincers of the ants would not give way, and though the bodies were torn off the heads remained. The station felons, when a man is condemned for witchcraft, generally fasten him to a tree before an ardent of these ants. After they have passed a skeleton alone is left to tell the tale."

Europeans who visit the great tropical forests of Africa are subject to many risks, but none perhaps so dangerous as ants. It is devoured with ferocious fury, and within a few minutes a pile of cleaned bones marks the spot where it passed. A great deal of valuable information about the dreaded creatures has been published by Mr. French-Woodcock. Mr. Chalmer, who has described a personal encounter with the bull ants, says: "I remember well the first time I met this bushhorrors on a road. I knew not what was in store for me. I was humming by myself, when suddenly the forest became alive with the foe. A sudden dread seized me, and I stood still in the hunting path, resting on my gun. Suddenly, as if by magic, I was covered and bitten everywhere. I fled in haste and found refuge in a deep stream, yet even then the strong pincers of the ants would not give way, and though the bodies were torn off the heads remained. The native tribes, when a man is condemned for witchcraft, generally fasten him to a tree before an ant-hill of these ants. After they have passed a shining skeleton alone remains on the tree.

"Well, it looks as if nobody is in it," said the first visitor to the new house.

"Yes," replied the second visitor, "it looks as if the family had moved out and left the house to let."

"Mamma, I'm afraid I'm going to be sick."

"Why, dear?"

"Because I've eaten so much."

"Then you'll be better when you've been sick."

"But I'm afraid I'll be sick before I've been sick."

"Ah, Mr. Jones, I'm glad to see you. Have you heard the latest?"

"No, what is it?"

"Why, Mrs. Brown has had twins."

"Twins! Why, I thought she was a widow."

"She is."

"Pa, what is a bachelor?"

"A bachelor, my son, is a man who has no wife to tell him what to do."

"Then why don't you be a bachelor, pa?"

"Mamma, I'm afraid I'm going to be sick."

Necessity knows no law," and necessity is at the bottom of this GREAT CLOTHING CLEARANCE SALE.

Our always strictly-adhered-to policy of "never to pack goods away from one season to the next" makes it imperative for us to hasten the departure of present stock before the arrival of Spring goods. We can expect plenty of cold weather—more than likely the coldest of the year. Then, too, the foresighted man will need no urging to provide now for next Winter's needs.

A Meal in a Moment

Bovril will do it for you

A meal prepared with the help of a chafing dish has a great fascination for many.

But the woman who uses a chafing dish and hasn't tried what the addition of a few drops of Bovril will do, has yet to find out how delightfully piquant and appetising, a chafing dish preparation can be made.

Not only does "Bovril" add to the richness and taste, but also very materially to the nourishing qualities, and that's best of all.

Let Me Sell You a Chatham Incubator —On Time

Do you know there is big money in raising poultry? Do you know it is more profitable than anything else on the farm? Do you know that you can do it for the asking? Well, I know all these things are true, and I propose to prove it. The Chatham Incubator and Brooder has proved itself to be the most perfect machine in Canada. What Is Catarrh?

SIMPLE WAY TO OVERCOME THE DANGERS OF THIS DISAGREEABLE DISEASE.

Catarrh is an inflammation of the mucous membrane of the nose, throat and lungs, with many annoying symptoms. It is the cause of more than a few who go for years suffering from it in a chronic form, and who at last succumb to some dangerous stage of the disease.

Fortunately, within the last few years a simple and reliable treatment for catarrh has been found and perfected. It is a combination of healing and antiseptic vapors, that when breathed through the nasal passages reaches the tiniest cells in the respiratory tract, killing the germs of catarrh, relieving dropping in the throat, stopping the nasty headache, and curing the worst cases of catarrh, cold in the head or catarrhal deafness.

Catarrhozone is sold by druggists everywhere, or will be sent to any address on receipt of price, one dollar, by The Catarrhozone Co., Kingston, Ont. Write to-day for this valuable book, which tells you how to cure yourself at home. Don't neglect yourself any longer. Don't be talked into taking something else because it is cheaper. You want the best cure and you can have it by writing to-day to The Catarrhozone Co., Kingston, Ont. Don't delay. Write to-day.

THE COLLEGE WIDOW.

There seems to be no hesitation on the part of the people over the production of Geo. Nearly every member of the big cast has had from one to two years experience and personal success in his or her role, and the fact that Mr. Sutton originally created the certain part is a very big plus in the play of which he becomes famous to best portray. Gentry and daughter lines is significant.

An elaborate production of the play has been made. The costumes are in a profusion of scenery, and will be the finest effects ever produced in Kingston, Saturday, Jan. 26th, matinee and night.

The ceremony, performed at St. Matthew's Church, Marlbank, at 11 a.m. The church was filled with guests, and the scene was very pretty. The bride was gowned in white silk and wore a veil with a wreath of white roses. Her cousin, Miss Carrie McGuinness, of Napanee, acted as bridesmaid, while Mr. VanAlstine assisted the groom. The happy pair drove to the McGuinness homestead in Napanee, and after the ceremony supper had been served partook of the dainty meal provided for guests unknown. On their return they will settle on a farm near Roslin.

CHAPTER XIX.

"WHY, good evening. Is that you?" struggled somewhat hysterically through Beverly's lips. Not since the dear old days of the stolen jam and sugar bun had she known the feelings of a child caught red handed. The light from the park lamps revealed a merry, knowing smile on the face of Yetive, but those of the men were serious. Graustark was the picture of suppressed of the others. Nevertheless, she was nervous and embarrassed over the situation. There was every reason to fear that the Iron Count had heard and seen enough to form a pretty good opinion of what had passed between herself and Baldos in this remote corner of the park. A deep sense of shame was taking possession of her.

Marlanx, smiling significantly, looked into her brave little face and permitted her to talk on until she had run out of breath and composure. Then he bowed with exaggerated gallantry and informed her that he was here to command and that it was not for him to forgive, but to accept whatever was her gracious pleasure. He called upon the chair bearers, and they took up their burden. Beverly promptly cleared her mind and concluded to walk to the castle. And so they started off, the chair going ahead as if out of consideration forever. Despite her efforts to do so the American girl—feeling very much abused, by the way—was unsuccessful in the attempt to keep the princess at her side. Yetive deliberately walked ahead with Halfont and Danglosa. It seemed to Beverly that they walked unnecessarily fast and that Marlanx was provokingly slow. Baldos was twenty paces behind, as was his custom.

"Is it necessary for me to ask you to double the number of lessons I am to have?" Marlanx asked. He was quite too close to her side to please Beverly.

"Why, you learn in one lesson? Most Americans think they know all about poker after the first game."

"I am not so quick witted, your highness."

"For be it from me to accelerate your wits, Count Marlanx. It might not be creditable."

"You might profit by losing, you know," he ventured, leaning still closer. "Poker is not the only game of chance. It was a chance that gave me a winning hand this evening."

"I don't understand."

"It shall be my pleasure to teach you in return for instruction I am to have. I have tried to teach your excellent guard one piece of the game. He has not profited, I fear. He has been blind enough to pick a losing hand in spite of my advice. It is the misfortune of heroes. Beverly could not but understand. She shrank away with a shudder. Her wits did not desert her, however.

"I know the game," she said steadily. "One's object is to oust off all the bowers. I have been very lucky at the game, Count Marlanx."

"Umph!" was his ironical comment. "Ah, I see this is a night for bowers?" he went on, changing his voice suddenly. "He stood in the shadows, where even the moon failed to light that benighted corner, and waited for answering steps from the path.

Within less than a minute over her head, and close at hand, there was a shower of cut coins and Beverly was startled by the discovery that Baldos was a hopeless witness at this inopportune moment. Even her mind was busy, but he held it tight.

"Hideous! by gum, sah!" she cried, hoarse with passion.

"Will your chinchilla, my lady, it will mean life death. I have evidence that will insure his conviction and execution within an hour. Nothing could save him. Call him, I say, and"—

"I will call him. He is my sworn protector, and I will command him to knock you down if you don't go away," she flared, stepping decisively.

"At his peril!"

"Baldos!" she called, without a second's hesitation. The guard came up with a rush just as Marlanx released her arm and fell away with a muttered imprecation.

"Your highness!" cried Baldos, who had witnessed everything.

"Are you afraid to die?" she demanded briefly and clearly.

"No!"

"That is all," she said, suddenly calm. "I merely wanted to prove it to Count Marlanx." Then had come to her relief most opportunely. Like a flash she saw that a conflict between the commander of the army and a guard could have but one result, and that disastrous to the latter. Any word from her would have ended everything for Baldos. She saw, through the Iron Count's rage as if it were a plate glass, and profited where he least expected her to extend it to adversaries. Marlanx had contrived to involve the servant by the guard. His object had been to make Baldos hate his own quarters, and a terrible incident it would have been. One blow would have removed the destined pearl. Neither of them had saved the guard—this had struck her superior officer, but Beverly thought in time.

"To die is easy, your highness. You have but to ask it of me," said Baldos. His face was white and drawn.

"She has no intention of demanding such a pleasant sacrifice," observed Count Marlanx, covering his failure skillfully. "Later on, perhaps, she may sign your death warrant. I am proud to be—"

"If I strike you it will be to kill Count Marlanx. The paper, sir." Baldos towered over the Iron Count, and there was danger in his daredevil voice. "Surely, sir, I am not obeying your own instructions. Protect the princess and all that is hers with your life, you have said to me."

"Oh, I wish you hadn't done this, Baldos," cried Beverly, panic stricken.

"You have threatened my life. I shall not forget it, too! Here is the precious paper, your highness, with my condolences to the writer." Marlanx bowed low and extended the paper, which Baldos took in his left hand. "I dare say you will get your pay, sir. Do you wish me to do anything more?"

"Where are you to be found?" asked the colonel, calmly, as if nothing had happened.

"I am going to the castle with the princess and her party, sir. I am serving his highness."

"Let's go," ordered Beverly. Her evident contempt infuriated Marlanx. In his heart he knew Baldos to be a man of unbroken birth and a foeman not to be despised from his own station, excused away by passion, he decided that he could crush Beverly.

"You have drawn on me, sir," he snarled. "I must defend myself against your attack on you. You will be—"

was sweet. Would that you had let the play go on. There was a spice in it that made life worth living and death worth the dying. Have you other commands for me, your highness?" His manner was so cool and defiant that she felt the tears spring to her eyes.

"Only that you put up your sword and end this miserable affair by going to your own room."

"It is punishment enough. Tomorrow's execution can be no harder."

Marlanx had been thinking all this time. Into his soul came the thrill of triumph, the consciousness of a mighty power. He saw the chance to benefit by the sudden clash, and he was not slow to seize it.

"Never fear, my man," he said eagerly; "it won't be as bad as that. I can well afford to overlook your indiscretion of to-night. There will be no execution, as you call it. This was an affair between men, not between man and the state. Our gracious princess is to be our judge. It is for her to pardon and to condemn. It was very pretty of you, indeed, and you get a good a swordsman to be shot. Go for first lesson in the Graustark language," she said, smiling coyly upon the count.

Two men in uniform came rushing up to the party nominally excited. Baldos, in the general, took begun to speak at once.

"One at a time," commanded the count. "What is it?"

Other officers of the guard and a few noblemen from the castle came up, out of breath.

"We have observed signal fires in the hills, your excellency," said one of the men from the fort. "There is a circle of fires, and they mean something important. For half an hour they have been burning near the monastery, also in the valley below and on the mountains to the south."

There was an instant of deathly silence, as if the hearers awaited a crash. Marlanx looked steadily at Beverly's face, and she saw the triumphant, accusing gleam in his eyes. Helplessly she stood into the crowd of faces. Her eyes fell upon Baldos, who suddenly appeared in the background. His face wore a haunted, imploring look. The next instant he disappeared among the shadows.

CHAPTER XX.

"THERE is no time to be lost," exclaimed Count Marlanx. "Ask Colonel Brare to report to me at the eastern gate with a detail of picked troopers—a hundred of them. I will meet him there in half an hour." He gave other sharp, imperative commands, and in the twinkling of an eye the peaceful atmosphere was transformed into the turbulent, exciting rush of activity. The significance of the fires seen in the hills could not be cheaply held. Instant action was demanded. The city was filled with the commotion of alarm; the army was brought to its feet with a jerk that startled even the most ambitious.

The first thing that General Marlanx did was to instruct Quinnot to set a vigilant watch over Baldos. He was not to be arrested, but it was understood that the surveillance should be but little short of incarceration. He was found at the barracks shortly after the report concerning the signal fires and told in plain words that General Marlanx had ordered a guard placed over him for the time being, pending the result of an investigation. Baldos had confidently expected to be thrown into a dungeon for his affront. He did not know that Grenfall Lorry stood firm in his conviction that Baldos was no spy and was supported by other high authority.

Marlanx was fuming his wrath and holding back his revenge for a distinct purpose. Apart from the existence of a strong loyalty, prejudice in the guard's favor, what the old general believed and what he could prove were two distinct propositions. He was really enough, however, to take advantage of a condition inimical to Beverly Calhoun, the innocent cause of all his bitterness toward Baldos.

As he listened from the council chamber his eyes swept the crowd of eager, excited women in the grand hall. From among them he picked Beverly and advanced upon her without regard for the confusion he created. Her quick animation he was keen enough to see that she was sorely troubled. She did not shrink from him, as he could have expected, but met him with bold disdain in her eyes.

"Is the work of your champion," he said in tones that did not reach even other than few ears. "I professed it, your pardon. Are you satisfied now that you have been deceived in him?"

"I have implicit confidence in him. I suppose you have ordered his arrest?" she asked, with quiet scorn.

"He is under surveillance, at my suggestion. For your sake, and your alone, I am giving him a chance. He is your protege. You are responsible for his conduct. To-morrow I shall call on you in an endeavor to get your with an eager exclamation. But Beverly had been thinking of the very object that now quivered before her in the tall light, sharp, aggressive and clear as it was the night when she saw it for the first time.

A long, slim red feather bobbed to and fro as if sitting her with soldierly dignity. Its base was an orange, into which had been stuck by the hand that fought it from below. Beverly guessed it with more ecstasy than was warranted from the stone falling, Yetive looking on in amazement. Suggestion seemed to be in command then. For the man who had sent the red message, but he was nowhere in sight. It was with the sudden realization that she was executing a most unsuitable commission on him as well as to the prince. She did not understand that she was watching from the shadows she was. She withdrew from the rail in confusion, and to her bedchamber, followed by her curious companion. There were explanations—none of which struck speaker or listener as logical and there were giggles which completed the situation. Beverly threw the red feather into her hair and struck an attitude that would have set Baldos wild with joy if he could have seen it. The next day, when she appeared in the park, the Beverly Dundas of old days was the bane of her sailor hat, though womanly perverseness compelled her to ignore Baldos when he passed her on his way to mass.

The Duke of Mirmar came into the park that day. He was in full dress uniform, a dark cloak the only concession to the chill of the winter day. He was the hostor, Beverly had been told, and she was the honored guest. Her mules five miles from the nearest village. CHAPTER XXIII.

BALDOS started off at once for the castle, his heart singing, in the darkness of the night he kissed the message which came to him from "her highness." The envelope had been closed with the seal of Yetive, princess of ...arck, and was sacred to the eyes of no one save the man to whom it was addressed. The words it contained ...ented deep in his brain:

"...ordered to report for duty in ...s room at once. Her highness ...n official command to Colonel ... Count Mariaux has been the ...r not expected to desert until you ...m me. There is an underground ... somewhere.

Baldos went alone and swiftly. The ...r to Colonel Quinnox had been ...n. He was to serve as a ... until further orders. Some one, ... it was reported, had tried to enter Miss Calhoun's room from the outside during the rainstorm of the previous night, and a special guard was to be stationed near the door. All of this was unknown to Baldos, but he did not ask for any explanations.

He was halfway to the castle when the sharp report of a gun startled him. A bullet whizzed close to his ear! Baldos broke into a crouching run, but did not change his course. He knew that the shot was intended for him and that its mission was to prevent him from reaching the castle. The attendants at the castle door admitted him, posting and excited, and he was taken immediately to the enchanted boudoir of the princess, which but few men were fortunate enough to enter. There were three women in the room.

"I am here to report, your highness," said he, bowing low before the real princess, with a smile upon his flushed face.

"You are prompt," said the princess. "What have you to report, sir?"

"That an attempt has just been made to kill a member of the castle guard," he easily answered.

"Impossible!"

"I am quite certain of it, your highness. The bullet almost clipped my ear."

"Good heavens!" gasped the listeners. Then they eagerly plied him with more agitated questions than he could answer.

"And did you not pursue the wretch?" cried the princess.

"No, your highness. I was commanded to report to you at once. Only the success of the assassin could have made me—well, hesitate," said he calmly. "A soldier has but to obey."

"Do you think there was a deliberate attempt to kill you?" asked the Countess Dagmar. Beverly Calhoun was dumb with consternation.

"I cannot say, madame. Possibly it was an accidental discharge. One should not make accusations unsupported. If you have no immediate need of my services, your highness, I will ask permission to remain in the service for half an hour. I have a peculiar longing to investigate." There was a determined gleam in his eyes.

"No, no!" cried Beverly. "Don't you dare to go out there again. You are to stay right here in the castle, sir. We have something else for you to do. It was that awful old Mariaux who shot at you, Sir"—

"I left General Mariaux in Colonel Quinnox's quarters, Miss Calhoun," interposed Baldos grimly. "He could not have fired the shot. For five or three nights, your highness, I have been followed and dogged with humiliating persistence by two men wearing the uniform of castle guards. They do not sleep at the barracks. May I ask what I have done to be submitted to such treatment?" There was a trace of poorly concealed indignation in his voice.

"I assure you that this is news to me," said Yetive in amazement.

"I am being watched as if I were a common thief," he went on boldly. "These men are not your agents; they are not the agents of Granstark. May I be permitted to say that they are spies set upon me by a man who has an object in disgracing me? Who that man is I leave to your royal conjecture."

"Mariaux!"

"Yes, your highness. He bears me a deadly grudge and yet he fears me. I know full well that he and his agents have built a strong case against me. They are almost ready to close in upon me, and they will have false evidence so carefully prepared that even my truest friends may doubt my loyalty to you and to the cause I serve. Before God, I have been true to my oath. I am loyal to Granstark. It was a sorry day when I left the valley and"—

"Oh," cried Beverly piteously, "don't say that."

"Alas, Miss Calhoun, it is true," said he sadly. "I am penned up here where I cannot fight back. Treason is laid against me. But, beyond all this, I have permitted my loyalty to mislead my ambition. I have aspired to something I can cherish, but never possess. Better that I never should have tasted of the unattainable than to have the cup withdrawn just as its sweetness begins to intoxicate."

He stood before them, pale with suppressed emotion. The women of Granstark looked involuntarily at Beverly, who sat cold and voiceless, staring at the face of the guard. She knew what it meant; she knew that treachery was expected of her. A word from her and he would understand that he had been tested of the unattainable. In any brief moment she saw that she had deliberately led him on, that she had encouraged him, that she actually aided and proffered him the cup from which he had begun to sip the bitterness. Pride and love were waging a conflict in this hapless southern girl's heart. But she was silent. She could not say the word.

"I think I know what you mean, Baldos," said Yetive, seeing that Beverly would not intervene. "We are sorry. No one trusts to your honor more than I do. My husband believes in you. I have confidence that you are to be arrested as a spy tomorrow. Tonight you are to serve as a guard in the castle. This should prove to you that I have unbounded faith in you. Moreover, I shall here lay it to the extent that I should not be afraid to trust many if you were to go out into the world with your secret which we possess. You came here under a peculiar stress of circumstances, not wholly of your own volition. Believe me, I am your friend."

"I shall revere your highness forever for those words," said he simply. His eyes went hungrily to Beverly's averted face and then assumed a careless gleam which indicated that he had resigned himself to the inevitable.

"I am constrained to ask you one question, sir," went on the princess. "You are not the common goat hunter you assume. Will you tell me in confidence who you really are?" The others held their breath. He hesitated for a moment.

"Will it suffice if I say that I am an unfortunate friend and advocate of Prince Danilo? I have risked everything for his sake, and I fear I have lost everything. I have failed to be of service to him, but through no fault of mine. Fate has been against me."

"You are Christobel!" cried Dagmar eagerly.

He gave her a startled glance, but offered no denial. Beverly's face was a study. If he were Christobel, then what of the game warden's daughter?

"We shall question you no further," said Yetive. "You enlisted to serve Miss Calhoun. It is for her to command you while you are here. May God be with you to the end. Miss Calhoun, will you tell him what his duties are for tonight? Come, my dear."

Yetive and Dagmar walked slowly from the room, leaving Beverly and her guard alone.

"I am at your service, Miss Calhoun," he said easily. His apparent indifference stung her into womanly revolt.

"I was a fool last night," she said abruptly.

"No; I was the fool. I have been the fool from the beginning. You shall not blame yourself, for I do not blame you. It has been a sweet comedy, a summer pastime. Forget what I may have said to you last night, forget what my eyes may have told for weeks and weeks."

"I shall never forget," she said. "You deserve the best in the world. Would that I could give it to you. You have braved many dangers for my sake. I shall not forget. Do you know that we were watched last night?"

"Watched!" he cried incredulously. "Oh, fool that I am! I might have known. And I have subjected you to—to—don't tell me that harsh thing you've been said to you, Miss Calhoun!" He was deeply disturbed.

"General Mariaux saw you. He has threatened me, Baldos"—

"I will kill him! What do I care for the consequences? He shall pay dearly for"—

"Stop! Where are you going? You are to remain here, sir, and take your commands from me. I don't want you to kill him. They'd hang you, or something just as bad. You ought to be punished, never fear!" Baldos smiled in spite of his dismay. It was impossible to face this confident champion in petticoats without catching her enthusiasm. "What have you done with"—

"With that rose?" she asked suddenly, flushing and diffident. Her eyes glistened with embarrassment.

"It lies next my heart. I love it," he said bravely.

"I think I'll command you to return it to me," naively.

"A command to be disobeyed. It is in exchange for my feather," he smiled confidently.

"Well, of course, if you are going to be mean about—Now, let me see," she said confusedly, "what are your duties for tonight? You are to stand guard in the corridor. Once in awhile you will go out upon the balcony and take a look. You see, I am afraid of some one. Oh, Baldos, what's the use of my trifling like this? You are to escape from Edelweiss tonight. That is the whole plan—the whole idea in a nutshell. Don't look like that. Don't you want to go?" Now she was trembling with excitement.

"I do not want to leave you," he cried eagerly. "It would be cowardly. Mariaux would understand that you gave aid and sanction. You would be left to face the charges he would make. Don't you see, Beverly? You would be implicated; you would be accused. Why did you not let me kill him? No; I will not go!" Neither noticed the name by which he had called her.

"But I insist!" she cried weakly. "You must go away from me. I—I command you to"—

"Is it because you want to drive me out of your life forever?" he demanded, sudden understanding coming to him.

"Don't put it that way," she murmured.

"Is it because you care for me that you want me to go?" he insisted, drawing near. "Is it because you fear you love I bear for you?"

"Yes! Yes! You don't really— Stop! Remember where you are, sir! You must not go on with it, Baldos. Don't come a step nearer. Do go tonight! It is for the best. I have been awfully wicked in letting it run on as it has. Forgive me; please forgive me," she pleaded. He drew back, pale and hurt. A great dignity settled upon his face. His dark eyes crushed her with their quiet scorn.

"I understand, Miss Calhoun. The play is over. You will find the luckless vagabond a gentleman, after all. You ask me to descret the cause I serve. That is enough. I shall go tonight."

The girl was near to surrender. Had it not been for the persistent fear that her proud old father might suffer from her willfulness, she would have thrown down the barrier and risked everything in the choice. Her heart was crying out hungrily for the love of this tall, mysterious soldier of fortune.

"It is not that," she murmured finally. Later on she was to know the meaning of the peculiar smile he gave her.

"I go because you dismiss me, not because I fear an enemy. If you choose to remember me at all, be just enough to believe that I am not a shameless coward."

"You are brave and true and good, and I am a miserable, deceitful wretch," she lamented. "You will seek Ravone and the others?"

"Yes; they are my friends. They love my poverty. And now, may it please your highness, when am I to go forth, and in what garb? I should no longer wear the honest uniform of a Granstark guard."

"Leave it to me. Everything shall be arranged. You will be discreet? No one is to know that I am your"—

"Rest assured, Miss Calhoun. I have been discreet. And he smiled contemptuously.

"I agree with you," said she regretfully. "You will have to hold your tongue. He laughed harshly. "For once in a way will you answer a question?"

"I will not promise."

"You say that you are Dantan's friend. Is it true that he is to marry the daughter of the Duke of Mata, Countess Iolanda?"

"It has been so reported."

"Is she beautiful?"

"Yes; exceedingly."

"But is he to marry her?" she insisted, she knew not why.

"How should I know, your highness?"

"If you call me 'your highness' again I'll despise you!" she flared miserably.

"Another question: Is it true that the young Duke Christobel fled because his father objected to his marriage with a game warden's daughter?"

"I have never heard so," with a touch of hauteur.

"Does he know that the girl is dead?" she asked cruelly. Baldos did not answer for a long time. He stared at her steadily, his eyes expressing no emotion from which she could judge him.

"I think he is ignorant of that calamity, Miss Calhoun," he said. "With your permission I shall withdraw. There is nothing to be gained by delay." It was such a palpable affront that she shrank within herself and cried.

Without answering, she walked unsteadily to the window and looked out into the night. A mist came into her eyes. For many minutes she remained there, striving to regain control of her emotions. At this time she knew that she was standing just where she had left him, like a statue, awaiting her command. At last she faced him resolutely.

"You will receive instructions as to your duties here from the guard at the stairs. When you hear the hall clock strike the hour of 2 in the morning go into the closet, but do not let any one see you or suspect. You know where it is. The door will be unlocked."

"Am I not to see you again?" he asked, and she did not think him properly depressed.

"Yes"—she answered after a pause that seemed like an eternity, and he went quietly silently away.

CHAPTER XXIV.

WHEN Baldos was standing on guard in the castle for half way the iron Count was busy with the machinations which were calculated to result in sterling upheaval with the break of a new day. He prepared and swore to the charges preferred against Baldos. They were dispatched to the princess for her signature and she, in her own signature to charges by which complicity in the betrayal of Granstark, influenced by the charms of the lover who masqueraded as her protege. At some length she dwelt upon the well laid plot of the spy and his accomplice. He told of the secret meetings, their outrages against the dignity of the court and their unmistakable animosity toward Granstark. For each and every count in his vicious indictment against the girl he professed to have absolute proof by means of more than one reputable witness.

It was not the design of Mariaux to present this document to the princess and her cabinet. He knew full well that it would meet the fate it deserved. It was intended for the eyes of Beverly Calhoun alone. By means of the vile accusations, false though they were, he hoped to terrorize her into submission. He longed to possess this lithe, beautiful creature from over the sea, in all his life he had not hungered for anything as he now craved Beverly Calhoun. He saw that his position in the army was rendered insecure by the events of the last day. A bold, vicious stroke was his only means for securing the prize he longed for more than he longed for honor and fame.

Restless and enraged, consumed by jealousy and fear, he hung about the castle grounds long after he had drawn the diabolical charges. He knew that Baldos was inside the castle, favored, while he, a noble of the realm, was relegated to ignominy and the promise of degradation. Encamped outside the city walls the army lay without a leader. Each hour saw the numbers augmented by the arrival of reserves from the districts of the principality. His place was out there with the staff. Yet he could not drag himself away from the charmed circle in which his prey was sleeping. Morose and grim were damp and moldy; the odor of the rank earth assailed the nostrils; the air was chill and deathlike.

"Where do you know?" she demanded quickly.

"I have traversed the passage before, Miss Calhoun," he replied. She stopped like one paralyzed, her eyes wide and incredulous. "Franz was my guide from the upper gate into the chapel. It is easy enough to get outside the walls, but extremely difficult to return," he went on easily.

"You mean to say that you have been in and out by way of this passage?" she cried, her voice quivering with disappointment. "And you never told me!"

"My desire to communicate with friends could not enter into the matter. Will it interest you if I say that the particular subject of my concern was a young woman?"

She turned and was stubbornly silent for a few time. Disappointment filled her soul. Love's disappointment in this young man. A young woman! he had said, and so insolently! There could be but one young woman in his case. The confession of it settled one point in her mind.

"It matters little to me in the least. I don't care who she was. Perhaps not to you," she said, with icy hauteur, "but to me it does. Certainly for the present I shall not trouble you with any questions. I am delighted to have found a way to get out of the castle."

"Then you have not changed your mind?" he asked, in the matter. There was a note of relief in his voice that she had missed in the first flush of her disappointment.

"Changed my mind? Why should I? Will it interest you if I say that the present state of affairs is unbearable?

During the last fifty-five years the public wealth of Switzerland has increased from 20 00 000 to 12 000 000 francs, a remarkable increase for a country so poor in natural resources. "Woman's work is never done." There is always something to do—running up and down, stairs, lifting, bending, stooping—no wonder the Kidneys become affected. When the Kidneys are weakened or strained, the delicate female organs are disturbed and inflamed, bringing on a train of female complaints.

A Rare Combination for Women

So Says the Doctor about Dr. Hugo's Health Tablets

We never object to showing the formula of Dr. Hugo's Health Tablets to any reliable physician.

We showed it recently to a doctor of many years' experience.

The other day he wrote us a letter. Doctor-like he doesn't wish his name published, but says we may publish the letter. Here it is:

Messrs. B. N. Robinson & Co.,
Coaticook.

Gentlemen,—I have studied carefully the formula for Dr. Hugo's Health Tablets for Women, which you submitted to me, and I am free to admit that it is a rare combination to meet the various diseases to which women are subject, and shows that it has come from one who has mastered the art of healing the disease peculiar to females.

M.D.

The doctor speaks truly when he calls the remedy a "rare combination," for that is just what the tablets are.

They combine the very latest remedies for women known to medical science. There cannot be anything better until there are new discoveries in medicine.

If you have been taking the old remedies put on the market years ago, don't. You can get something better, and the best is none too good for any sick or run-down woman.

In Dr. Hugo's Health Tablets for Women, you will find all that medical science can devise to this date to make you a healthy woman, and you need nothing they do not contain.

Beverly of Graustark

By Geo. Barr McCutcheon,

Author of "Graustark."

Copyright, 1901, by Dodd, Mead & Co.

"Fool! Don't you suppose I know a woman's skirts?" cried the Iron Count. "Better than most men, I fancy," calmly responded Baldos. "My young friend wore the garments of a woman, let me add."

Harry came down and grasped Baldos by the arm. His eyes were stern and accusing. Above, Yetive and Beverly had clasped hands and were looking on curiously. What did Baldos mean? "Then you did go through the park last night? And you were accompanied by a woman, a stranger? How comes this, sir? Speak, I charge you!" Harry's face was flushed and his hand at his juncture, as if preparing to spring the steps as the detail fun.

It is not the first time that I have seen a woman in the garments of a man," said Baldos, amused by the looks of consternation on the faces of the others. "I advise you to close it. I have been in more than one scrape by this way, to be sure, but I always get out of it with honor. Count Marlanx is a member of the band—but silence. Count Marlanx might also be say that the disguise of the night of the ex-ile was a study in enough to make a man envious. Mingling at him with diplomatic appointment in their expressive fashion was strange. Count Marlanx here did all that had been under his face all along. It required the keenest glance to convince one that that she was ignorant of the meaning of movements on the part of the princess. Again every one turned upon the bold, smiling countenance.

"I have been cruelly deceived in you, Count Marlanx," cried the Princess Yetive, with a proud gesture of indignation. "You have got implicitly. I am not thank it of you, Baldos. After the manner in which you have chosen to expose so thoroughly your own infamy in order to punish an innocent person who befriended you. You did not have to come back to the kingdom. You might have escaped punishment by using Miss Calhoun as a shield from her highness' wrath. But since she has you compel me to give countenance to all that Count Marlanx has said."

"I insist that it was Miss Calhoun who went through the panel with him," said Marlanx eagerly. "If it was this boy who accompanied you, what was his excuse in returning to the castle after you had fled?"

"He came back to watch over Miss Calhoun while she slept. It was my sworn duty to guard her from the man who had pursued her. This boy is a member of the band to which I belong, and he watched while I went forth on my pretty business of my own. It will be useless to ask what that business was. I will not tell. Nor will the boy. You may kill us, but our secrets die with us. This much I will say: We have done nothing disloyal to Graustark. You may believe me or not. It has been necessary for me to communicate with my friends, and I found the means even after my arrival here. All the lords that live in the hill have not four legs," he concluded significantly.

"Why, you are a traitor!" exclaimed Lorry, there was real admiration in his voice. "I'm sorry you were fool enough to come back and get into the trap. I don't feel surprised, gentlemen, for I believe in your hearts you have known him as well as I do."

The faint smile that met the remark was confirmation enough. Nearly every man present had served in England, speaking kinds and not a word of the conversation had been missed.

"I suppose I am to be arrested, Mr. Lorry," said Baldos calmly. "I knew it the warrant awaited me. I knew that Miss Calhoun's life was no secret. I came back willingly, gladly, your highness, and now I am ready to face the music. There is nothing for me to fear."

"And after you have confessed to all the particulars? By George, I like your nerve," exclaimed Lorry.

"I have been amply vindicated," cried Marlanx. "Put him in irons—and the boy also."

"Well interwove the boy," said Lorry, remembering the lad beneath the cloak.

"See, he's sleeping so sweetly," said Baldos gently. "Poor lad, he has not known a week for months. I suppose he will have to be awakened, poor lad to be arrested."

Colonel Quinnox and Haddan crossed the grounds to the big cedar. The boy sitting to his feet at their call and stood, half asleep, silent. Haddan clasped his arms, and a moment later the slight figure came pathetically into the intervening space between the stalwart guards.

"Why has he remained here, certain of arrest?" demanded Lorry in surprise.

"He was safer with me than anywhere else, Mr. Lorry. You may shoot me a thousand times, but I implore you to deal gently with my unhappy friend. He has done no wrong. The clothes you see upon his slender form are torturing the poor heart more than you can know. The burning flush upon that cheek is the

"Thank God!" he whispered joyously. "I knew it, but I was afraid you never would speak the words. I am happy—I am with with joy."

"But they may shoot you," she stood dered. "You have condemned yourself. Oh, I cannot talk to you as I want to—not here before all these people. Don't move, Colonel Quinnox. They can't see through you. Please stand still."

"They will not shoot me, Beverly, dear. I am not a spy," said Baldos, looking down into the eyes of the slender bodied figure who stood inside the princess. "It is better that I should die, however," he went on bitterly. "Life will not be worth living without you. You would not give yourself to the lowly, humble hunter, so I"—

"I will marry you, Paul. I love you. Can't anything be done to"—

"It is bound to come out all right in the end," he cried, drawing up his head to drink in the new joy of living. "They will find that I have done nothing to injure Graustark. Wait, dearest, until the day gives up its news. It will not be long in coming. Ah, this promise of young lives and never life, new joy. I could shoot it from the housetops!"

"But, don't!" she cried nervously. "How does she happen to be here with you? Tell me, Paul. Oh, isn't she a dear?"

"You shall know everything in time. Watch over her, dearest. I have lied today for you, but it was a lie I loved. Care for her if you love me. When I am free and in favor again you will—Ah!" He broke off suddenly with an exclamation. His eyes were bent eagerly on the circle of trees just beyond the parade ground. Then his hand grasped here in one spasmodic grip of relief. An instant later he was towering, with head bare, at the top of the steps, his hand pointing dramatically toward the trees.

Baynes, still in his ragged uniform, haggard, but eager, was standing like a gaunt specter in the sunlight that flooded the terrace. The vagabond, with the eyes of all upon him, raised and lowered his arms thrice, and the face of Baldos became radiant.

"Your highness," he cried to Yetive, waving his hand toward the stranger, "I have the honor to announce the Prince of Dawnbergen."

CHAPTER XXVIII

THIS startling announcement threw the company into the greatest excitement. Baldos ran down the steps and to the side of the astonished princess.

"Prince Dantan!" she cried, unbelieving.

He pushed the boyish figure aside and whispered earnestly into Yetive's ear. She smiled warmly in response, and her eyes sparkled.

"And this, your highness, is his sister, the Princess Candace," he announced aloud, bowing to the slender girl. At that instant she ceased to be the timid, crouching boy. Her chin went up in truly royal manner, and she, even haughtily, responded to the dazed, half-formed salutes of the men. With a rare skill—or knowing one, perhaps—mischief was paramount—she took to Baldos, giving him her hand to kiss.

"Ah, dear Baldos, you have achieved your sweetest triumph—the theatrical climax to all this time of plotting. My brother's sister have you for all this. Your highness"—and she turned to Yetive with a captivating smile—"is the lucklessest of Dantan women in your castle? May I rest here in peace? It has been a bitterly long year, this past week," she sighed. Fatigue shot back into her sweet face, and Yetive's love went out to her unreservedly. As she drew the slight figure to the steps she turned and said to her ministers:

"I shall be glad to receive Prince Dantan in the throne room without delay. I am going to put the princess to bed."

"Your highness," said Baldos from below, "may I be the first to announce to you that there will be no war with Dawnbergen?"

This was too much. Even Marlanx looked at his enemy with something like collapse in his eyes.

"What do you mean?" cried Lorry, seizing him by the arm.

"I mean that Prince Dantan is here to announce the reception of Gabriel, his half brother. Before the hour is past your ears will be down from the dungeon in the mountains will come to report the return of the fugitive. This announcement may explain in a measure the conduct that has earned for me the accusation which confronts me. The men who have retaken Gabriel are the members of that little band you have heard so much about. Once I was its captain. Prince Dantan's chief of staff —the commander of his ragged army of twelve. Miss Calhoun and fate brought me into Edelweiss, but my loyalty to the object exposed by our glorious little army has never wavered. Without me they have succeeded in tricking and trapping Gabriel. It is more than the great army of Graustark could do. Your highness will pardon the boast under the circumstances."

"If this is true, you have accomplished a miracle," exclaimed Lorry, profoundly astonished. "But then I be tried! I can't believe it. It is too good. It is too utterly improbable. Is that really Prince Dantan?"

"Assuming that it is Dantan, Grenfall," said Yetive, "I fancy it is not courteous in us to let him stand over there all alone and ignored. Go to him, please." With that she passed through the doors, accompanied by Beverly and the young princess. Lorry and others went to greet the emaciated visitor in rags and tags. Colonel Quinnox and Baron Dangloss looked at one another in doubt and uncertainty. What were they to do with Baldos, the prisoner?

"You are asking yourself what is to be done with me," said Baldos easily. "The order is for my arrest. Only the princess can annul it. She has retired on a mission of love and tenderness. I would not have her disturbed. There is nothing left for you to do but to place me in a cell. I am quite ready, Colonel Quinnox. You will be wise to put me in a place where I cannot hoodwink you further. You do not beat me a grudge?" He laughed so heartily, so fearlessly, that Quinnox forgave him everything. Dangloss chuckled, an unheard of emotion on his part.

"We shall meet again, Count Marlanx. You were not far wrong in your accusations against me, but you have yet to account for in another direction.

"This is all a clever trick," cried the Iron Count. "But you shall find me ready to accommodate you when the time comes."

At this juncture Lorry and Count Halfont came up with Bavone. Baldos would have knelt before his ruler had not the worn, sickly young man restrained him.

"Your hand, Captain Baldos," he said. "Most loyal of friends, you have won far more than the honor and love I can bestow upon you. They tell me you are a prisoner, a supposed traitor. It shall be my duty and joy to explain your motives and your actions. I have no fear. The hour will be short for the fruit much the sweeter for the bitterness."

"Your hand, Captain Baldos."

"Thunder," muttered Harry And Sh "You don't intend to slap him in a dungeon, do you, Gren?" Baldos overheard the remark.

"I prefer that course, sir, until I have clearly established that all I have said to you is the truth. Count Marlanx must be satisfied," said he.

"And, Baldos, is all well with" asked the one we have known as Marlanx.

"She is being put to bed," said Baldos, with a laugh so jolly that Bavone's lean face was wreathed in a sympathetic smile. "I am ready, gentlemen." He marched gallantly away between the guards, followed by Dangloss and Colonel Quinnox.

Naturally the Graustark leaders were cautious, even skeptical. They applied confirmation of the glorious news with varying emotions. The shock produced by the appearance of Prince Dantan in the person of the ragged Bavone was almost stupefying. Even Beverly, who knew the vagabond better than all the others, had not dreamed of Bavone as the fugitive prince. Secretly she had hoped so long as it was could that Baldos would prove, after all, to be no other than Dantan. This hope had dwindled to nothing. Love, she was quite prepared for the revelation. She now saw that he was not for her, and that he was and not for what he might have been.

"He is my best friend," said Bavone, as they led Baldos away. "I am glad Bavone, gentlemen, and I am content to be known by that name until by her fortune gives me the right to use another. You can hardly expect a king in rags to be called a prince. The is much to be accomplished, much to be forgiven, before there is a Prince Dantan of Dawnbergen again."

"You are faint and weak," said Lorry, suddenly perceiving his plight. "The hospitality of the castle is yours. The promise we made a few days ago holds good. Her highness will be proud to have you when you are ready to come to the throne room. I am confident Lorry. Come, sir; rest and refresh yourself in our guidded house. An hour ago we were making ready to march into battle, but your astonishing, but welcome news is calculated to change every plan we have made."

"Undoubtedly, sir," it will, Dawnbergen hardly will make a fight to resist Graustark. He is safe in your dungeons. If they want him now they must come to your stronghold. They will not do it, believe me," said Bavone simply. "Alas, I am faint and sore as you suspect. May I lie down for an hour or two? In that time you will have heard from your wardens, and my story will be substantiated. Then I shall be glad to accept your hospitality as it is proffered. Outside your city gates my humble followers lie sparing. Let me prove to you that I will send them cheer and succor."

THEY WILL CURE

"Fool! Don't you suppose I know a woman's skirts?" cried the Iron Count. Neither that nor your men, if I may calmly respond to Baldos. "My young friend wears the garments of a woman, let me add."

Lorry came down and grasped Bellejo by the arm. His eyes were stern and unrelenting. Above, Yetive and Beverly had clasped hands and were looking on dumbly. What did Baldos mean? Then, you did go through the passage? And you were accompanied by this legless stranger? How comes this, Monsieur Bellejo?" Every eye was fixed on this figure as he stood there, apparently stopping the steps as he leaned on his crutch.

"It is the first time that I have been through the passage, sir," said Baldos, answered by the looks of consternation. "I was to close it behind me, and I have been no more than one step from it. I know, by-the-way, to whom I owe the passage. A gentleman, a member of the band of Monsieur Calhoun found me in the passage. Count Stephan Dantan will vouch for what I say. Count Stephan, you will bear me out in this matter. He is right. I have communed with myself and outside of these walls, and when he accused me of losing Personal control of my reputeness, I was aware of all of the enormity of my reprehensible conduct. I have indulged of all the pleasures of life, including that of taking a fortune at this insight."

"Bellejo was a study in contrasting emotions. He looked at him with disappointment and chagrin at his expressive confession. Admiration was struggling with love and pity that they should have fallen all along. It rebelled in a single glance at the figure of the man who had been so long the object of his affections. Then it was that she was impressed by the conflicting movements on the part of Captain Lorry and Count Dantan, and stepped upon the bold, smiling Baldos.

"I have been unfairly deceived in you," said Lorry, feeling pain in his heart that he showed you implicitly. I might think it of you, Baldos. After all, it is honorable of you to expose so despicable your own infamy in order to acquit an innocent person who believed in you. You did not have to come back to the castle. You might have escaped punishment by using Miss Calhoun as a shield from her highness' wrath. But none the less you compel us to give countenance to all that Count Marlanx has said."

"I insist that it was Miss Calhoun who went through the panel with him," said Marlanx eagerly. "If it was this boy who overpowered you, what was her excuse in returning to the castle after you had fled?"

"He came back to watch over Miss Calhoun while she slept. It was my sworn duty to guard her from the man who had menaced her. This boy is a member of the band to which I belong, and he watched while I went forth on a pretty business of my own. It will be useless to ask what that business was. I will not tell. Nor will the boy. You may kill us, but our secrets die with us. That is all I will say. We have done nothing disloyal to Granstark. You may believe me or not. It has been my privilege to command

DIED AT BRAMPTON.

On Sunday morning, 13th Jan., death entered the home of Mr. and Mrs. L. W. Sproule, Brampton, and took from it their little son, Jackie. He was a bright and beautiful child of ten years. Although he was very sick and suffered intensely, he was never known to murmur or complain. Jackie went with his parents to Brampton seven years ago from Napanee, and ever since that time he has taken part in Sunday School entertainments and all good works and was loved by all who knew him. He had been sick for a year and a half, but for nine weeks at the last he was confined to his bed. Mr. and Mrs. Sproule have four sons left to brighten their home. The funeral took place on Sunday afternoon to Brampton cemetery. The deepest sympathy is extended to the family from one and all. The school children and a large number from Dufferin Street School attended in a body. Six of Jackie's little boy friends conveyed him to his last resting-place. The floral offerings were beautiful.

PROPOSED LEGISLATION.

The speech from the throne at the opening of the Legislature yesterday afternoon outlined an interesting programme of Government legislation, though not so heavy a one as that of the last session. One of the most important measures to be foreshadowed, it is said, will embody amendments to the public school act of last year. These, it is reported, will make changes in regard to the minimum salary sections. As far as can be ascertained, the principle of minimum salaries will not be abandoned, but there seems to be an idea that clauses will be added so that compulsion will not be exercised in school districts where the minimum salary enactments really work hardship on the ratepayers. It is said that the grant from the Provincial treasury to the public schools will be very largely increased this year, the state of the finances fully warranting that step. The working out of the minimum clauses has given the Government some anxiety. Several of the private members on the Government side of the House have in public and in private expressed their opposition to the clause.

Legislation will undoubtedly be predicted in respect to the price of school text-books. The Government, it is understood, have already met with encouragement in preliminary steps taken in this regard. There seems to be little doubt that the Government will adopt the plan several times suggested of distributing the books, which are likely to be printed by one or two firms to whom the contract will be awarded in response to public advertisements for tenders. In this connection it is reported that the subject matter of the text-books is to be thoroughly overhauled and revised, and that this will be done by selected committee or commissioners at the head of which will be one of the expert officials of the Education Department, and that the Educational Council will be represented on the body to whom this work will be entrusted. The high schools, truancy and public libraries acts are also education measures which are likely to be the subject of revision during the session.

WITH LIFE OUT OF TUNE

ONE'S DAYS SURE TO BE FULL OF DISSATISFACTION.

THE REBELLION OF JONAH

New Interpretation of the Text: "Doest Thou Well to Be Angry?" Wherein the Preacher Enforces the Influence of the Emotions Upon Those Who Permit Themselves to Be Controlled by Them.

Entered according to Act of Parliament of Canada, in the year 1906, by Frederick Isaac, Toronto, at the Department of Agriculture, Ottawa.

Los Angeles, Cal., Jan. 20.—In this sermon the preacher gives a new interpretation to the rebellion of Jonah, the prophet, and shows that when one gets fearfully out of tune with God and nature life is full of discord and of misfortune. The text is Jonah, iv. 2: "Doest thou well to be angry?"

Some years I was inclined to think that Jonah was the most human character in the Bible next to Jesus Christ. He was a man of like passions with ourselves. Abraham or Samuel or David or Isaiah who knew all about God and who were in communion with Him were not human in this respect. But Jonah was a man who, when he got into trouble, was the most human of all. He was a man who, when he got out of trouble, was the most human of all. He was a man who, when he got into the belly of the whale, was human enough to pray to God, and who, when he got out of the belly of the whale, was human enough to go to Nineveh and preach against sin. Very many people in this world are like Jonah. They are human enough to pray to God when they get into trouble, and human enough to go to Nineveh when they get out of trouble, but they are not human enough to be like Christ. They are not human enough to listen to the message of God when it comes to them, and to refrain from all forms of Christian ministration when he brings up the book of the Bible as a text, and shows us that we are all unwilling that the Bible as a book of authority that we should obey as the necessary precedent to ridicule.

It is very easy to ridicule the Bible. Very many people do not read it. The power of ridicule can do that more than any form of attack on the Bible, which can be met by argument. But when we take the Bible for its message and for its meaning and study it in the light of God's revelation to us in Christ Jesus, we find that what happened to Jonah would have happened at that time to any man who was out of tune with God and who was in rebellion against God. Jonah had the message of God to Nineveh, and he was unwilling to go to Nineveh because he knew that God was merciful and gracious, and that if he went to Nineveh and preached to the people they would repent and God would forgive them. Jonah was willing to preach to the Ninevites if they would not repent, but he was unwilling to preach to them if they would repent, and that is the reason why he refused to go to Nineveh at first. He was out of tune with God, and he was in rebellion against God, and he was unwilling to do what God commanded him to do. Jonah was a Hebrew of the Hebrews. He was a man who had been brought up in the strictest sect of the Jews. He was a man who had been brought up in the strictest religious environment that the world could afford. He was a man who had been brought up in the strictest religious environment that the world could afford. He was a man who had been brought up in the strictest religious environment that the world could afford

MORGAN—McGINNESS.

On Tuesday, Jan. 15th, 1907, a very pretty wedding was solemnized at St. Matthew's church, Marlbank, when Miss Mabel Winnifred McGinness, youngest daughter of the late Arthur H. McGinness, Richmond, and Harry Stewart Morgan, of Marlbank, were united in the holy bonds of matrimony. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. J. W. Jones at 11 a.m. The church was filled with guests, and the choir ably assisted. The bride was given away by her brother, Reid. H. McGinness. The handsome young bride was beautifully attired in a superb gown of white silk, wearing a lace veil and wreath of orange blossoms, and carried a beautiful bouquet of white carnations. Her sister, Miss Cissie McGinness, Napanee, acted as bridesmaid, while Mr. H. Manahan, Toronto, assisted Mr. Groom. After the ceremony the bridal party proceeded to the Rev. J. W. Jones, close to the McGinness homestead where a sumptuous wedding dinner awaited them. The bride's travelling suit was dark brown cloth with brown fancy silk blouse and hat to match. The groom's mother, Mrs. H. Morgan, presented to a beautiful black silk with gold lace trimmings. The bride was the recipient of beautiful and costly presents, showing the esteem in which she is held by her friends. The happy couple left on the afternoon train for Ottawa and other points of interest. On their return they will reside on farm near Roblin.

ANNIVERSARY ENTERTAINMENT AND ORGANIZATION.

The anniversary tea and entertainment of the U.E.L. Methodist church, Middlebrook, was held on Friday evening, Jan. 18th, 1907. After partaking of refreshments, provided in abundance by the ladies, a very excellent and entertaining programme was given, Rev. G. Hooper, of Moscow, formerly a much esteemed pastor of the circuit, being present and very ably occupied the chair. The speaker of the evening was Rev. Geo. W. McCall, B.A., B.D., of Wellington. He discoursed with great enthusiasm, taking for a subject "Heroes of our Time," showing true manliness to be the highest form of heroism, and the highest form of manliness attainable or known was that of Christian. Miss Hazel Hawley, daughter of Rev. C. Horton, sang several solos in sweet voice and pleasing manner, which were received from the encore following her selections, highly appreciated by the audience. Mr. Taylor, of Picton, also sang several solos in fine voice, and pleasantly responded to the encores he received, much to the delight of his hearers.

One of the many pleasing features of the evening was the presentation to be the highest form of heroism, and the highest form of manliness attainable or known was that of Christian, Miss Hazel Hawley, daughter of Rev. Mr. Taylor, of Picton, also sang several solos in fine voice, and pleasantly responded to the encores he received, much to the delight of his hearers.

One of the many pleasing features of the evening was the presentation to the pastor, Rev. Mahaffy, a purse on behalf of the congregation of the U.E.L. church, to Mr. and Mrs. Bickerdyke, who have lately removed to Napanee. The following address, written by their pastor, was read, Mr. George Hawley, of Napanee, replying on behalf of his father and mother.

Dorland, Jan. 21st, 1907.

To Mr. and Mrs. Bickerson Hawley.

It is with feelings of sadness that we learn of your removal from this neighborhood. We have appreciated your presence with us during the years you have come, in which you, Mr. Hawley, have played the man; you have been for years a trustee of this church, in fact one of the best. Then were trustees at the time of its erection. You have occupied positions of trust that included in them responsibility and work which were not cheerfully borne or given. We will miss you from the church and from the community to which, by your integrity and uprightness, you were made a blessing to yourself. And you, Mrs. Hawley, are simply beloved in the church and whole community. Your faithfulness and zeal in the Sabbath school have made you a power for good. Your place in the W.M.S. for years has been filled with

ENTERPRISE.

A very quiet but pretty wedding was celebrated at the residence of Mr. Dunnington, on Wednesday, by Rev. R. Allin, when Mr. Osborne Dunnington, of Napanee, was united in marriage to Miss Ada Wagar, of Sidney. The bride was attended by her sister, Miss Wagar, and Mr. Dunnington, brother of the groom, supported the groom. The bride looked very charming in a navy blue cloth suit with hat to match. After the ceremony the happy couple left on the train for Napanee, where they will reside.

The show is positively the best and finest that has ever visited the Grand Opera House in Kingston for many years.

The annual congregational meeting was held on Wednesday evening. The pastor, Rev. J. R. Conning, M.A., presided. The report of the past year was most encouraging and all the departments of the church showed healthy progress. Each of the societies, having a representative right on the board, the Board of Managers, Messrs. T. Benson and W. A. Carter were elected for two years to the Board of Stewards, and Mr. Thos. Johnston one of the auditors for the next two years. Thereafter was a social hour of tea, and it was decided to purchase an individual communion service.

MUSICAL CLUB.

Schubert and Schumann Day proved very interesting to the club members. The essayists Mrs. Simpson and Miss E. Parks, gave very instructive papers on the composers' lives and works. Miss Dafoe well interpreted and gave a descriptive analysis of Schubert's "Serenade," and Miss VanLuven and Miss Ligh rendered his "Serenade" song. Others participating in programme were Miss H. Williams, Miss H. Warman, Mr. Miller, Mrs. F. S. Wartman and Miss Miller. The next meeting, which will be held Feb. 28, will be "Request day," and is certain to be of high standard under the careful management of Mrs. Macnaughton and Mrs. Herrington. Any members having requests to prepare for that day, kindly send them to Mrs. Macnaughton as soon as possible. See Secy.

PARISH OF CAMDEN.

The Parish had record missionary meetings on Sunday, Jan. 20th, taking the cold and windy weather into consideration. The Rev. A. J. McTaggart, rector of Bath, preached most able and interesting sermons, with the following results: Camden East left on Yarker collection, $20.00; Bath and Lake collection, $13.50, contributed by ladies, Lower Lake collection, $12.74, making a total grand total of $46.24. The majority of the Camden people were not in church at all. The people of Yarker, Newburgh and those in Camden East deserve the greatest praise for their liberality on Sunday last.

The Rev. Mr. Hall, rector of the parish of Camden, and Lake, with his usual energy, addressed the congregations of Lake's church, Camden East and Yarker in the evening, and by his earnest appeal aroused the congregations to a liberality that was surprising. The services throughout were very successful and interesting.

NOT BURIED IN DEATH.

The highly respected old ladies, sisters, died on Friday and Saturday last, but fifteen hours elapsed between the deaths, so sudden and unlooked for. They were Mrs. Eleanor Mc-Kenzie, relict of Mr. T. D. Anderson, in her ninety-first year, and Mrs. Mary Anderson, southern Mrs. Anderson, in her eightieth year, Mrs. Ashton and Mrs. McKenzie had resided with Mrs. Anderson for a number of years, by whom they were tenderly cared for. Each lady had been afflicted with blindness for a long time, but managed to way for sure far from helpless, and were able to sew and do house work quite readily when occasion demanded. Although confined closely to the house, they made many friends by their gentle, uncomplaining manner and christian graces. The funeral took place last Sunday afternoon, Rev. Canon Davis conducting the service at the house. It is estimated the funeral occurred at the same house, as was the case on Sunday.

ANNUAL MEETING.

The annual meeting of the Napanee Cemetery Co. was held on Tuesday, and the business of the Company are certainly in a splendid condition. The following officers were elected:

President—F. W. Smith.
Secretary—W. T. Wallace.
Treasurer—H. S. Lapum.
Directors—M. S. Maddle, Homer Miles, Thos. Jameson, Henry Wilson, F. W. Vandusen and Robert Boyes.
Auditor—W. F. Hall.

After paying all current expenses for the year, there was cash in treasury to the amount of $434.60, and in addition to that amount there was on deposit in the savings department of the Dominion Bank the sum of $806.15, making a total of cash on hand $1,284.80. The company purpose to erect at the entrance to the cemetery a granite gate with iron gates attached thereto, as well as a new iron fence along a portion of the front of the cemetery. They also contemplate erecting a new cement vault, the chapel completed, for which they are obtaining estimates of cost, so as to proceed with the work as early as possible in the spring.

THE NEED OF SLEEP.

The Duke of Wellington's principle, "Early to bed and early to rise, is Wisdom and Health and Wealth and Happiness," has been popularized by the Early to Bed Association for the Advancement of Sleep, which conducted experiments resulting in the conclusion that the average number of hours of sleep necessary was too small.

One of the experiments upon which the Early to Bed Association settles is to the effect that a member who found by a series of tests that his power of resistance was better after a long sleep than after a short one. Memory, as affected by one's attention, or ability to call to mind what one has learned, is also affected by fatigue. So also is judgment, which is dependent upon memory. Nobody knows that his judgment is not affected by fatigue, but there are few who believe that it is not. Judgment is the faculty which enables us to form a correct opinion of a thing dependent upon the facts which we have in mind. Would be well for those who are warned by the failures of previous years to look well to their judgment as to whether they should not seek a change of occupation, or otherwise arrange their affairs so as to secure more sleep. Unsubsidized there would be more nervousness in the world, and more need for sanatoriums. It pays to avoid nervousness. Time for sleep and keep early hours. Let windows open at night to admit plenty of fresh air.

The Duke of Westminster, a person of much active hours for a man, never sleeps more than four or five hours, and is reported by the British Association for the Advancement of Science conducted experiments to find the exact amount of sleep required by each of the three several classes of men.

One set of men made upon which the Bi tish Association relied were to be kept awake for as many hours as possible, and to report on the effect after a short one. Many fell asleep in less than an hour, and the test function which earliest decays is the memory. Next to go is the quickness and by advancing age. No one knew the exact amount that his neighbor's is, but there are few who need to be told how to improve it. Sleep is through ignorance a thing dependent on habit. If there were no artificial lights, no nervousness, less indulgence in food, we should probably need for maintenance. Many would allow themselves more time for sleep and keep their bedrooms at night to admit plenty of fresh air.

NEWBURGH.

Last night the house owned and occupied by W. J. Lemmon was burned. The house is a large two-storey stone building, situated near the cemetery. How the fire originated is not known, but no one was in the house at the time. Mr. Lemmon, who is a barber, was just closing his shop when the fire was discovered. The flames had gained too much headway for anything in the house to be saved by the time Mr. Lemmon made an attempt to get in. Mr. Lemmon was insured for $1,000 in the Mutual Fire Insurance Co., but was forced to leave his furniture to the flames. The building was insured for $1,000 in the Royal. Mr. and Mrs. Lemmon have the sympathy of the community in their loss. The fire goes out to Mr. Lemmon's credit as a member of the Board of Directors of the Mutual Fire Insurance Co. Mr. Lemmon is also a director of the Lennox Agricultural Society. Mr. Lemmon will be succeeded in business by Mr. Courtney Fraser.

The Newburgh rink was opened on Saturday, and although the ice was not in the best of condition a game was played between teams which were composed of the following players: Newburgh—Frank Bird, Frank Hawley, Percy Frank Hawley, Fred Bird, Will Bird and Mrs. Lemmon. Napanee—Dr. Ward, Dr. Cowan, Dr. Stratton, Dr. Lingham, goes out to Mr. Lemmon's credit as a member of the Board of Directors of the Mutual Fire Insurance Co. Mr. Lemmon is also a director of the Lennox Agricultural Society. Mr. Lemmon will be succeeded in business by Mr. Courtney Fraser.

The principal ingredient—the one that stops the headache, is a vegetable ingredient, imported for us from Japan. It won't hurt you any more than will the soda.

The other ingredients of Zutoo are just as harmless.

If you know what the drug cures contain, and their ill mate effect on the system, you would discard them at once and take Zutoo, which is harmless as

Constipation Beverly of Graustark

By Geo. Barr McCutcheon.

Author of "Graustark."

Copyright, 1901, by Dodd, Mead & Co.

"Father says the United States papers are full of awful war scares from the Balkans. Are we a part of the Balkans, Yetive?" she asked. "He says I'm to come right off home. Says he'll not pay a nickel of ransom for the brigands which rise, as they did Miss Stone and that woman who had the baby. He says mother is worried half to death. He just going to cable him that it's all off, because he says if war breaks out he's going to send my brother Dan over here to get me. I'm having Aunt Jo send him this cablegram from St. Petersburg. They never fight in Ruritania, do they, except with each other. Skip mailing a letter dear. Will be home soon. Beverly." How does that sound? It will cost a lot, but he brought it from his own head. And we're not in Ruritania, anyway. Aunt Joe will have it. Please call on A. D. T. boy. Regards. I want to send this message to St. Petersburg."

When Candace entered the princess' boudoir half an hour later she was far from being the timid youth who first came to the ladies of the Castle Perilous. She was now attired in one of Beverly's gowns, and it was most becoming to her. Her short, curly bobbed hair, her up-to-date complexion and white complexion was as fetching as ever, now that the dust of the journey and the dark stain were gone. She met the wonder and interest of the women, and she was, all in all, a most delightful bit of feminine.

"You are surely more of a princess than when I first saw you," said Yetive, looking her slowly over. "Some of the window seat to-day."

"Candace was such a pretty thing," said Jacquar. "You don't know what you've been in those."

"Oh, they were terribly uncomfortable, and they were forever getting under my feet. I made them for more than a week."

"You shall tell us all about it," said Yetive, holding the girl's hand in hers. "You must have been a most interesting page."

"There is much to tell, your highness, if what I have to tell is worth the telling. I will do my best to tell it all. Old Rappo, master of the stables, who has loved me for a hundred years, he says, helped me to escape from the palace at night. They were to have seized me the next morning. Rappo has been master of the stables for more than forty years. Dear old Rappo! He procured the boy's clothing for me, and his two sons accompanied me to the hills, where I soon found my brother and his men. We saw your scouts and talked to them a day or two after I became a member of the band. Rappo's boys are with the band now. But my brother Ingram shall tell you of that. I was so frightened I could not tell what was going on. I have lived in the open air for a week, but I love it. Ruritania's friends are all heroes. You will love them. Yesterday old Prinn brought a message into the camp from Baldos. He told certain Baldos of the plan to seize the princess, who was in the hills near your Castle Perilous. You know of that. You know it two days ago, Baldos is treacherous. He met us at a point where we had been in want of provisions and with Prinn for that purpose. We should have had it came to us. Prinn had a letter from Baldos, which he gave to my brother. He then rode straight to us. I think I may say that you never knew all the details of the district. But Prinn was bringing me here to break the news from the press. It was a terrible shock, and I'm sure he had another object in coming back at once."

Beverly nodded warmly. The three women were deeply interested in the letter, eagerly drinking in her naive story.

"We came in through one of the big gates and not through the underground passage. That was a lie," said Candace, looking from one to the other with her perfectly delicious twinkle in her eye. The conspirators gulped and smiled guiltily. "Baldos says there is a secret underground path here that leads to the fairy princess—not the real princess, you know. He came back to protect her, which was very brave of him, I am sure. Where is my brother?" she asked, suddenly anxious. "He's with friends, I don't be alarmed, dear," said Yetive.

"It is changing clothes, too? He has a clothes mania, I think. I needed them. Does he say positively that Gabriel has been captured?"

"Why did you not know of it?"

"I was sure it would happen. You know I was not with them in the pass."

Yetive was reflecting, a soft shade in her eyes.

"I was thinking of the time when I would see you once more," she said. "Quite years, mine were most uncomfortable. It was when I aided Mr. Lorry in escaping from the Tower. I wore a guard's uniform and rode miles with him in a dark carriage before he discovered the truth. He brushed at the resemblance of that trying hour."

"And I wore Ivy's clothes at a girl's party once—my brother Dan's," said Beverly, turning to Candace. "You came home instinctively, and I had to sit behind a bookcase for an hour. I didn't see much fun in Ivy's clothes."

"Father says the United States papers are full of awful war scares from the Balkans. Are we a part of the Balkans, Yetive?" she asked. "He says I'm to come right off home. Says he'll not pay a nickel of ransom for the brigands which rise, as they did Miss Stone and that woman who had the baby. He says mother is worried half to death. He just going to cable him that it's all off, because he says if war breaks out he's going to send my brother Dan over here to get me. I'm having Aunt Jo send him this cablegram from St. Petersburg. They never fight in Ruritania, do they, except with each other. Skip mailing a letter dear. Will be home soon. Beverly." How does that sound? It will cost a lot, but he brought it from his own head. And we're not in Ruritania, anyway. Aunt Joe will have it. Please call on A. D. T. boy. Regards. I want to send this message to St. Petersburg."

When Candace entered the princess' boudoir half an hour later she was far from being the timid youth who first came to the ladies of the Castle Perilous. She was now attired in one of Beverly's gowns, and it was most becoming to her. Her short, curly bobbed hair, her up-to-date complexion and white complexion was as fetching as ever, now that the dust of the journey and the dark stain were gone. She met the wonder and interest of the women, and she was, all in all, a most delightful bit of feminine.

"You are surely more of a princess than when I first saw you," said Yetive, looking her slowly over. "Some of the window seat to-day."

"Candace was such a pretty thing," said Jacquar. "You don't know what you've been in those."

"Oh, they were terribly uncomfortable, and they were forever getting under my feet. I made them for more than a week."

"You shall tell us all about it," said Yetive, holding the girl's hand in hers. "You must have been a most interesting page."

"There is much to tell, your highness, if what I have to tell is worth the telling. I will do my best to tell it all. Old Rappo, master of the stables, who has loved me for a hundred years, he says, helped me to escape from the palace at night. They were to have seized me the next morning. Rappo has been master of the stables for more than forty years. Dear old Rappo! He procured the boy's clothing for me, and his two sons accompanied me to the hills, where I soon found my brother and his men. We saw your scouts and talked to them a day or two after I became a member of the band. Rappo's boys are with the band now. But my brother Ingram shall tell you of that. Tallest High School Student.

Carl Fletcher, standing six feet seven and a half inches in his shoes, a member of the class of '09 of the Rantoul High school, will hardly have his claim disputed to being the tallest high school student in the United States. Sophomore Fletcher is but eighteen years old, so that by the time he reaches man's stature he should have added at least three more inches to his height. The abnormal development of Carl Fletcher (pursuant to law) is not readily ascribed to heritage. Fletcher pore is but five feet five inches, and the schoolboy's mother is four inches taller than her husband. All of the members of the family are of normal height, although an older brother, manager of the Latona drug store, is six feet two inches.—Seattle Times.

The Biggest Telescope.

The biggest telescope in the world is the Crossley telescope, the full feet in diameter, twenty inches wider than the Yerkes. It was constructed ten years ago by Dr. A. A. Common, a well known astronomer of England, who wanted it for research work. He died soon afterward, and his son Lockwood became like. Two years ago it was purchased by the Harvard college observatory, which proceeded at once to mount it on the observatory grounds at Cambridge. The work has been necessarily slow, for mounting a great telescope is not like building a house.

BUILDING CEMENT.

The Most Ancient Form Was Simply Burned Limestone.

Cement, concrete and especially "reinforced concrete" will, according to some authorities, solve many of the hard problems confronting the architects and builders of modern structures. Cement is known to have been used by the Chaldeans, Egyptians, Greeks and Romans. The most ancient form of cement was simply burned limestone, more or less pure, used very much as ordinary lime is used at the present time. The Romans were the first to adulterate lime by adding certain clay salts and date for the purpose of making cement of a hydraulic nature—that is, one which would set or harden under water. Pliny, who lived in the first century A. D., describes the method of modifying ordinary burned limestone and converting it into a form of hydraulic cement.

In ancient times it was believed that the best cement was made from the hardest rock, and this opinion was not modified from the time of the Romans down to the eighteenth century. However, John Smeaton, the man who built the second Eddystone lighthouse, in course of examining the various hydraulic cements for use in the foundation and masonry made the important discovery that the quality of hydraulic cement depends upon the amount of clay in the limestone. This is conceded to be the most important discovery in the art in nearly twenty centuries.

On the Isle of Portland, in the south of England, there are certain quarries of limestone which have been worked for many years, in former times producing building stone. In 1824 an Englishman named Joseph Aspdin—of Leeds, patented a process for mixing and burning lime and clay. The product looked so much like the Portland limestone that he called it "portland cement," from which the commonly known name is given to nearly all kinds of hydraulic cement was derived.—Chicago News.

Scientific Wrecks.

The German government has taken possession of a short strip of track near Berlin and is planning to execute a unique series of railroad "accidents" made to order. Every variety of misplaced switch will be tested, every possible defect in wheels, axles and car equipment will be tried out, and the grand finale is to be an immense head-on collision of locomotives. These spectacular exhibitions are not planned by the government as a national amusement. They are for the purpose of scientific experiment, so that the officials of railway experts may study ways and means to prevent accidents of all kinds in the future.

Railroad disasters have occurred with alarming frequency in the German empire. It is estimated that the German railways lose $1,250,000 annually through damages. After the causes and effects of each variety of wreck has been noted it will be the task of government officials to devise safeguards.—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

THE PARLOR.

It Is Rapidly Becoming an Apartment of the Past.

The American parlor is a thing of the past, according to architects, says the Cleveland Plain Dealer. No one will there be a room reserved for state occasions such as the receiving of formal calls, the visit of the minister and for weddings and for funerals.

"We never take the parlor into consideration any more," said a Cleveland architect recently. "The parlor is merged into the living room. The good old fashioned parlor, which was held in so much reverence in the old days, has no place in modern architecture.

"The demand is for a large living room in a small house, together with a dining room and kitchen. In a larger house there is usually a large living room, library, 'den,' dining room and kitchen.

"I had a client yesterday who desired to have a reception room or parlor not connected with the living room. He decided later to have a sort of reception room in connection with the hallway.

"When the parlor idea began to lose ground we did not make a radical change, but simply made the small reception room, isolated from the others, where formal calls could be received. Now we make no provision for the parlor.

"In these days the reception rooms do not have to be closed only to be opened on the occasion of the visit of the family minister or the physician.

"There may be many who still regret the passing of the old fashioned country parlor, with all its humorous of its flows, courtship and occasional sad heart impressions which have not been eradicated by the strenuous age of today.

TRIAL BY ORDEAL.

The Queer System That Exists in the Sinai Peninsula.

In the Sinai peninsula trial by ordeal is still practiced. In all criminal cases where no witnesses are forthcoming the judge, "el mahakim," tests the suspected person by fire, by water or by dream. In the first the judge places an iron pan in the fire until it is red hot and gives it to the accused to touch three times with his tongue. If marks of burning are shown on the tongue the accused is pronounced guilty. This theory apparently is that if he is not guilty the molecules on the tongue presents it from being burned if guilty his tongue would dry up from fear of being discovered.

The trial by water is described as follows: "The 'mahakim' sits with the accused and the spectators in a circle with a coarse jug full of water placed in the center. This jug is then made to appear to move round the circle by means of witchcraft or hypnotism. If the jug returns back to the judge the accused is pronounced not guilty, but if the jug stops opposite the accused he is pronounced guilty."

This description is rather wanting in details, and it is difficult to know how a jug which only appears to move can be a trustworthy index. In the test by dream the "mahakim" sleeps and sees in a dream if the accused is guilty or not.

Famous Baths.

Marie Antoinette's bath, which was presented to her doctor, was made of a pound of aromatic herbs mixed with a handful of salt. She took it cold in summer and hot in winter.

Later on Marie Taglioni had brought every morning to her house twenty pints of milk, which were mixed with a pounds of raspberries, which were mashed in her bath of warm milk and water. Another famous bath was that of modern women is composed of barley, rice, borrage, thyme and marjoram boiled together and then thrown into the water.

Ninon de l'Enclos took a bath every night in which there were two quarts and three pounds of honey mixed with milk, all well beaten in tepid rain water.

Cause For Liberality.

An old Georgia darky who had buried his money forgot to blaze the tree which stood near the spot. Years afterward he went to dig up the money, but he could not find the tree. He was in a quandary for a time, but finally he went to the preacher and told him that he had lost his money and could not find the tree. The preacher said: "Uncle Ben, you ought to be liberal with the church, for you can't tell which tree it was."

THE FRENCHMAN'S DINNER.

Hungry and Gave Free to the Evening in the True Parisian.

The Frenchman, with all his politeness and little niceties, is not a good dresser. He is nowhere near the class of the London man, nor can he equal the Baltimore man who gives thought to his wardrobe. This, of course, applies to generalities. There are exceptions more the Frenchman is a model of the tailor's and haberdasher's skill.

As a rule, however, there are other things that mean much more to him than mere clothes. For instance, he likes to dine. Every Frenchman, in the proper sense of the word, dines in the evening. He prefers highly seasoned food if he can get it and service of a corresponding degree of excellence. But dine he must and dine he will—if not a good dinner, then a poor one. He must have his soup, his fish, a roast, an entree, some salad, dessert and a bit of cheese. With this he has wine, the vintage regulated by the means of his bank roll. His coffee, in the summer time, he will have outside with a cigarette or cigar, and his enjoyment is not complete unless he hears the strains of an orchestra.

He is not, perhaps, so passionately fond of music as the German, but still he likes it and will have it if he can afford it. He is gay and happy in the evening, is the Frenchman, and his cares, whatever they are, he dismisses temporarily. He rises late, and he dines late. Nine o'clock is about the proper hour for the coffee after he has paid his respects to the various courses. Then he is ready for the gay life. When London is going to bed Paris is just beginning to warm up.—Letter in Baltimore News.

THE FATE OF CAPTAIN LEE.

A Debt of Gratitude That This Country Owes to Spain.

During the summer of 1776 Captain John Lee of Marblehead, cruising under commission from congress, having taken and sent home five valuable prizes, entered the port of Bilbao in Spain. The captains of two of his prizes and a part of their crews were on board. These officers immediately protested against their capture and had Captain Lee arrested on a charge of piracy. The local authorities sent the documents in the case to Madrid, to the minister of commission granted by this new and unknown power.

In the decision of the Spanish ministry depended not alone the fate of Captain Lee, but whether some of the most important ports in Europe should be opened or closed to American cruisers and privateers. The English minister in Spain brought all his influence to bear against Captain Lee. At this moment the Declaration of the Fourth of July reached Madrid. The complaint against Captain Lee was dismissed, supplies for his ship and the port equipping it were furnished, and public declaration was made that in Spanish ports the best flag of America was as free and as welcome as was the flag of England.

Spain, like France, also helped the United States with loosened money and with cargoes of military stores.

The "Longest Resident."

The poverty of the English language is exemplified by the unending task of making the rounds of a suburb and invites subscriptions to a testimonial to the standard measure. A canvasser who styles himself "the longest resident" she said physical fact being that he is probably the shortest—although in bulk and rotundity he makes up for the inches he lacks in height. Here is a case in which the very circumstance of the German language would be an indistinguishable help, for then this gentleman could quite correctly describe himself "the fortheburg-stine-herein resident" or even perhaps "the fortheburgest-stine-herein resident" individual. Thus compounding the drives of the Teutons may be awkward, but they express volumes in short words and in sonorous accuracy.—London Standard.

A Taste That Age Withers.

According to a member of the candy loving sex, there is no earthly evidence of age in a woman than being able to pass a bonbon shop without being tempted by the wares. "When a woman can do this," she says, "she is frankly middle aged. During your school days chocolates are a necessary and necessity of existence. During the early hey periods of matinee hero worship they are indispensable to the enjoyment of a performance. When you become too weak in the knees and too short in the wind to attend the next idea of a caramel or a marshmallow begin to search for the first gray hair.

Good For Evil.

There are some people who turn gray, but do not grow hoary; whose locks are furrowed, but not wrinkled; whose bent backs are not wrinkled in many places, but are not dead. There is a youth that bids defiance to old age, and this is the youth which lunches at the world's magic. These are they who have returned good for evil. Whom they have made die could not die if the young because they never grow old.

True Education.

The first, last and closest trial question to any living creature is, "What do you like?" and the entire object of true education is to make people not supply do the right things, but enjoy the right things.—John Ruskin.

Long and Short Days.

At Hamburg, Germany, the longest day occupies seventeen hours and the shortest seven. At Stockholm, in Sweden, the longest has eighteen and a half hours and the shortest five and a half. At St. Petersburg the longest has nineteen and the shortest five hours. In Finland the longest has twenty-one and a half hours. In the northernmost parts of Norway the longest day lasts from May 21 to July 2, the sun not setting below the horizon during this period, but skimming along very close to it in the north. At Spitzbergen the longest day lasts three months and a half.

The Word "Privilege."

Privilege, even as often as it is misused, is a good word. It has been misused in the sense of liberty, equality or justice, but it is a word of high meaning. It is derived from two Latin words, privus, private, and lex, law. It is the old sense that Chaucer used the word.

How to Arrive.

Man has to be humbugged if one would command him, and he has no use for the humble person. The way to get into a publisher's or editor's office (or indeed any other with a view at the head of it) is with a tremendous show of bonnes and swagger.—B. Spinster in M. A. P.

Dog Days and Rabies.

There is not the remotest connection between dog days and rabies, indeed, the records show that the fewest cases of rabies occur in July and August. There are more cases in April, November and December than in any other months.
